

HAVE IMPORTANT JOB

Not Minnows To Royal Canadian Navy Soldiers Head Of

Frank Love, Canadian Press, says Minnows are the most self-sufficient little war craft that waddle out of an old coast Canadian port daily on the way for trouble.

At least they're minnows in the theory. But in the unclassified they're anything but minnows. Being boats to corvettes that have been.

Small compact and packing a Vicious ability to rock and bounce, they are distinguished only by a number of identification that they resemble a blacked Chinese lantern.

But in the place of the Royal Canadian navy these they cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to underwrite the security of this country.

True, no one ever hears of them. They are covered and packed and sent men who keep them sailing through all kinds of weather misty for the navy's "torpedo" men classification. But their job is a big responsibility.

In the military world, they are in pre-dread class downgraded from the right thing to get their craft moving, and in trouble side down the harbor.

When they begin to move, they are afloat with their real job begins on the coast of hunting for any yachts or floating death U-boats may have strewn in the roadblocks of the sea.

Nothing is left to chance. With planned precision they comb the waters over and over, and in their armadas of fighting and merchant ships sail.

Only the navy knows the answer to that question. If it won't talk—until the war is over.

But the minnow's drudgery of mission is not in the least boring, nothing, and perhaps the best answer comes from the crews of the minnowed ships. They are not in and out through the swept channels. They take their hats off to the grimy little "torpedo" men. And when they salute they salute it.

A Ripping Entry
Ship Entered Algonk Harbor At A High Speed

American troops marched into Algonk, a floating port, and started to enter the harbor to unload. In the time the first ship entered, the harbor had been completely congested on the terrace above her.

They were new and everything that roused them to a fever-pitch of excitement. Many of them had been ships sailing the harbor before and were being carefully noted alongside by the new arrivals.

Saves Shipping Space

Dried Eggs, Meat, Butter, and Fruit Sent To Britain

A recent news item in the London Times states that prior to the war Great Britain bought in with her food imports no less than 5,000,000 tons of wheat a year. From a number of imported food commodities, this says the Times came to dried fruit and early autumn fruits to be preserved for winter use.

For example, a quart of milk from fresh cream and a can of milk has a volume of 60 cubic inches. As a powder, it weighs 5.5 ounces, with a volume of only 1.5 cubic inches. If the powder is compressed into a block 10 inches long, it will take up 10 cubic inches. This discovery, says the item, makes it possible for rich people to eat milk and still be preserved for winter use.

It is estimated that during 1943 Great Britain will use 100,000 tons of dried egg. The equivalent in liquid form of egg in shell would be more than five or six times as much. In fact, already says the Times, samples of dried milk have been sent to Australia, Argentina and the United States. This is literally milk in a can.

Not only are dried milk and egg economical of shipping space, but they do not require refrigeration for transport or storage. The item goes on to say that stores in both in Great Britain and the Dominions have co-operated to produce a method of shipping and storing butter without refrigeration. By removing the water and non-fat solids, a pure, dry butterfat is obtainable which is relatively non-perishable, cannot be spoiled by micro-organisms, and will keep for months without refrigeration.

Great care has been taken to ensure that the full nutritive value of dried foods is retained, says the item, and in general it can be said that if its palatability is retained, so are their nutritive value. That they relate their vitamin during drying and storage has been thoroughly tested. Manufacture is now in progress. It states in Canada, the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Great Britain, it says.

Army Salvage And Disposal Board

Conquerors who roam for their boots and addies must have been tugging with Colonel Dalley's gang. This is the conclusion of opinion of many around Ottawa these days, but it doesn't deny that the Colonel and his gang are outlaws. On the contrary they are a kind of rescue squad. Officially known as the Army Salvage and Disposal Board, they have recovered more than two and a half million dollars worth of equipment from the dirty line and the army base in less than a year and a half of operation.

"We pick up the pieces," says Col. Dalley, who in civilian life is a manager of the T. Eaton Company's Winnipeg store. "We salvage what the army has left behind."

the public. Some pet person is allowed to be served in restaurants, nor may any person obtain tea and coffee.

Officials of the rationing division at the Wartime Prices and Trade Board emphasize these rulings in order to put both protests and inquiries.

Shortage of Jute Bags

Any farmers who have empty bags, particularly the larger size, are urged to turn them without delay. There is shortage of material from which the bags are made, and the supply of jute is extremely limited.
